

Website #1: Teaching Tolerance

URL: <http://www.tolerance.org/classroom-resources>

Why I chose this site: I chose this site because it has a lot of great ideas for lessons that incorporate tolerance. There are lessons focusing on gender equality, racial equality, school culture, and appearance. Topics of appearance include weight, self-esteem, and body image. There are lessons for grades pre-K through 12th grade.

How this relates to classroom management/behavior management/this class or how teachers can use it: This relates to our class because some misbehaviors stem from feelings of low self esteem and from bullying. This site provides teachers with ideas for incorporating diversity into lesson plans. Teachers can address and educate students about differences.

Website #2: Pro Teacher

URL: <http://www.proteacher.com/030000.shtml>

Why I chose this site: This site is a helpful resource for teachers to find ideas for disciplinary actions, behavior management, and classroom management. There is also a message board for teachers to post questions about classroom management. The site also has suggestions for teacher that range from how to teach quiet walking in the hallway to blog posts of indoor recess games.

How this relates to classroom management/behavior management/this class or how teachers can use it: This relates to our class because it is a resource for teachers to connect with colleagues about classroom management. Teachers can share activities/lessons they have used and can respond to each other's concerns and questions.

Website #3: ClassDojo

URL: <https://www.classdojo.com/>

Why I chose this site: This is a site and an app that raises awareness of each student's behavior. It can serve as a motivator to do well because teachers are able to connect with parents through ClassDojo.

How this relates to classroom management/behavior management/this class or how teachers can use it: ClassDojo can be used by teachers to target positive behaviors of their students. When students demonstrate positive behaviors, the teacher can give them points through this free app and keep track. Individual students and groups of students can receive points. I have seen ClassDojo projected to the front of the room so the students can see their points. Teachers can also communicate with parents through the app and share pictures without giving out their own personal phone number.

Website #4: Education World

URL: http://www.educationworld.com/a\_curr/archives/behaviortips.shtml

Why I chose this site: I really like this site because there are so many great resources for teachers. There are lesson plans, professional development ideas, and school improvement activities.

How this relates to classroom management/behavior management/this class or how teachers can use it: In the Professional Development section of Education World, there are many resources for behavior management tips for teachers. Teachers are also able to post their own ideas to the site. The tips are organized into elements of behavior management including tardiness, good behavior, inappropriate behavior, classroom rewards, homework, bathroom tips, bullying, morning routines.

Website #5: Teacher Vision

URL: <https://www.teachervision.com/classroom-discipline/resource/5806.html>

Why I chose this site: This site has articles and printable activities for teachers to use relating to behavior management and classroom organization. It also has teaching advice and methods as well as ideas for lesson plans, bulletin boards, and games. Teacher vision has templates activities broken down into categories and/or grade level.

How this relates to classroom management/behavior management/this class or how teachers can use it: The behavior management section and classroom organization sections relate to the content of our course. There are suggestions for keeping the classroom organized and arranging it in a way that is most effective. There are also tips for keeping paperwork organized. In addition, there are articles about conflict resolutions, classroom discipline, and positive behavior as well as blank templates for tracking behavior.